

A Letter from Baldor

At Baldor, we understand that the number one way to make our retail customers happy is to make your customers happy.

We also know that that’s not always the easiest task. Today’s grocery shoppers have busy lives, high expectations, dietary preferences, and growing demands on their wallet. With our own roots in retail—as you may know, Baldor’s story started with Balducci’s gourmet grocery store—and our team’s combined 140 years in the grocery industry, we aim to always be a few steps ahead of consumer needs. Here are some of the areas we’re focused on in the year ahead:

Convenience. A recent McKinsey report found that Americans view convenience as the third most important buying factor at the supermarket, after price and quality—a whopping 82% say it’s extremely important. When segmented by Millennials and women (core grocery shoppers), the number rises. No wonder, considering that more than half of Millennials are now parents, who are likely balancing work, partners, home, and kids.

Research shows growing interest in value-add produce because it saves that precious commodity: time. Our Baldor-made Urban Roots lineup fit this bill, with prepped produce like stringless snap peas, shredded Brussels sprouts, mango chunks, and diced onions to perfectly portioned bags of potatoes, peppers, and carrots. (Our four fresh salsas, page 5, are phenomenal; if you haven’t tried them yet, I’d love to send you some!)

By the way, we can also provide greater convenience for your in-store prepared foods department. Instead of having your chefs chop and dice and slice, our Fresh Cuts processing team offers trays of more than 400 fruits and vegetables, in custom-cut specs.

Local/hyperlocal. As Accenture recently reported, grocery shoppers increasingly care about sustainability. One piece of that is local products—and even hyperlocal (grown miles from the store vs. hundreds or thousands of miles)—which reduce carbon emissions by reducing truck travel.

That’s one of our core specialties here at Baldor, with more than 15% of our produce grown within the watersheds of our distribution centers (in the Bronx, Maryland, Philadelphia and Boston)—including Lancaster Farms in Lancaster, PA, Little Leaf Farms in Devens, MA, and Satur Farms in Long Island, NY. Many of our non-produce items, including Little Sesame hummus, Red Jacket Orchards, Schaller & Weber meats, Ronnybrook milk, and Orwashers Bakery, are also produced in our regions.

The good news is that our focus on local has benefit to you, too, as it also increases shelf-life of produce products. The quicker to market, the better—for planet and people.

Healthy eating. According to McKinsey, 5 in 10 consumers say eating healthy is a top priority for them, and 55% will pay a premium for foods that contribute to health and wellness. We can help you meet these needs. Our exceptional produce is one easy way to help your customers feel good about eating well. In addition to traditionally grown fruit and veg, we offer more than 400 organic items, recognizing that many customers are looking for cleaner foods free of chemicals and pesticides.

But we also have plenty of products that will solve for customers’ specific dietary needs, like 88 Acres seed and nut bars, Norr’s high-protein, probiotic skyr yogurt, Cocojune’s vegan yogurts, Jovial’s gluten-free pastas, and Urban Remedy’s salads, booster shots, shakes, and tonics.

Your customers have a lot going on, and you do, too. Let us help reduce the friction for both of you—in the produce aisle and beyond (check out all our offerings in this guide). Reach out with any questions; we’d be more than happy to tell you more about how we can help.

Sincerely,

William Magistrelli
Senior Director, Retail Sales

URBAN ROOTS & FRESH CUTS

Everyone should be able to enjoy farm-fresh vegetables, even if they don't have the luxury of time, kitchen skills, or fancy cooking tools. Urban Roots and Fresh Cuts make that possible, with products ranging from pre-chopped, sliced, shredded, and spiralized produce to fresh salsas to peeled and cubed fruit. Utilizing Baldor's pre-cut service yields 100% usable product while reducing waste, eliminating prep time, saving on labor, and improving profitability.

ORGANIC PRODUCE

All of Baldor’s produce is exceptionally high quality, but for some customers, we know only organic will suffice. That’s why we carry organic versions of all the most popular fruits and veggies, such as berries, lettuces and leafy greens, carrots, grapes, stone fruit, and more. And it all comes from farms that have been using organic methods for generations and have a deep commitment to the earth.

DRY PASTA, GRAINS & SAUCES

Here are pastas for every taste and every need: Dry shapes and strands, shelf-stable gnocchi, fresh lasagna sheets, specialty cornmeal for polenta, arborio rice for risotto, and gluten-free varieties. We also have local and imported sauces that taste—dare we say it?—better than homemade. No matter what your consumers are craving, we’ve got all the ingredients for them to build their own comfort food creations.

REFRIGERATED COFFEE & TEA

When it comes to coffee and tea, we only offer the ready-to-drink or mix options that we would drink ourselves: Local and classic cold brews from ethically sourced beans, organic pop-and-sip bottled tea and tea bags for brewing, a less-sweet chai concentrate for at-home baristas, and flavor-forward kombuchas.

SHELF-STABLE BEVERAGES

Create an irresistible drink aisle in your store by shopping our collection. We look for beverages that stand out from the usual suspects, like spring and mineral waters bottled with the environment in mind; flavored sparklers with real fruit; and probiotic tonics that start with upcycled whey. Plus, upscale mixers that are good enough to sip on their own.

REFRIGERATED MILK & ALTERNATIVES

Every year, our dairy team raises our quality standards and increases our milk and alt milk offerings. Today’s consumer is savvier than ever about milk and dairy; combine that with rising dietary restrictions, and you need lots of options to ensure everyone can find the right carton. We have vetted conventional, local, organic, grass-fed, and A2-based milks and creams, as well as non-dairy choices made from seeds, pistachios, almonds, oats, and more.

BUTTER, CREAM CHEESE & SOUR CREAM

Whether your customers buy butter and spreads for baking, cooking, or simply slathering on toast, you’ll impress them with these thoughtfully sourced, off-the-beaten path options. Think Irish, local, cultured, and flavored butters; artisanal cream cheese from unexpected labels; tangy sour cream made by local creameries and vegan versions that hold their own against the real thing.

EGGS

Animal welfare is always a priority for Baldor, which is why we’re proud of our partnerships with ethical egg farms who produce the best cage-free, free-range, and pasture-raised eggs. Another reason this group of farmers gets top priority: Hens raised with welfare in mind lay eggs that taste better and have the most beautiful, golden yolks. Better eggs, better flavor, better world.

CHEESE

You can tell how much team Baldor loves cheese by the depth and size of the category—there’s no such thing as too much! From creamy buffalo mozzarella imported from Campania, Italy, to a local camembert from Connecticut, we can deliver the right cheese for your customer, whether they’re following a recipe, building a cheese board, or simply snacking.

DRIED FRUIT, NUTS & BARS

On-the-go healthy snacking has come a long way from just grabbing an apple or banana (though those are still solid options!). Maybe your customer needs a protein hit from nuts or is craving something sweet—and dried apricots, dates, or a halva bar would fit the bill. We have whatever a hungry snacker could want for their book bag, work bag, or gym bag.

SALTY SNACKS

When building categories, our team doesn’t focus on what’s popular—they track down the best. We offer small-batch crisps crafted by companies who give back to their community; chips from local makers who grow their own potatoes to ensure total quality control; tortilla chips made with heirloom corn for maximum flavor. Mainstream brands can be found in any market; we want you to be able to deliver something special on your shelves.

OIL & VINEGAR

You won’t find a better round up of oils and vinegars than this. Hailing from Spain, Italy, and Greece, there are bottles from multi-generational groves, others from organic terroir. Some are flavored with truffles, others with lemon. Closer to home, we have an array of nut oils from California, packaged in tin to keep the oil fresher for longer. And we have any vinegar a customer could possibly want, from classic balsamic to aged Sherry and Moscatel.

PROTEIN

Our meats come from farmers who care deeply about the animals they raise—their ancestry, their welfare, their feed, and how they’re processed. Our partner purveyors choose their ingredients carefully and strive for authenticity when crafting sausages, bacon, charcuterie, pâtés, deli meat, and burgers. You’ll taste the care in every bite. And for non-meat eaters, there’s tofu made from 100% US grown, non-GMO soybeans.

MEET OUR PARTNERS

Baldor partners with hundreds of farms and purveyors to bring you the best, most flavorful, highest-quality products. We vet each one carefully to make sure their values and business practices align with ours. They all have a unique story about how they got their start and what motivates them to bring their A-game every day. Here’s a sampling of some of our farms/purveyors—we guarantee their stories will make you feel good about putting their products on your shelves.

LANCASTER FARM FRESH

Compared to many commercial farming operations across the country, Lancaster Farm Fresh Cooperative might be considered "small"—all their beautiful organic squash, leafy greens, lettuces, sweet potatoes, and other produce grow on just 350 acres, divided among 100 or so small-scale farms in Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

But the cooperative's contribution to the land and the local farming community is huge. The quality and flavor of their produce and their commitment to sustainable growing practices are admirable. All their farms are certified USDA organic or use organic practices while working towards certification.

Lancaster Farm Fresh started in 2006 with just seven farms. Facing competition from large agribusiness, those farmers got together to discuss their options. (Fittingly, the meeting was held in a barn.) Though they had operated for years as competitors, they agreed that working together would help them all, and the cooperative was born. Fifteen years later, the flourishing network means growers can share valuable information about agricultural techniques, organic pest control, and soil enrichment.

Without belonging to the cooperative, many of these farmers would not be able to farm organically because it's a sometimes expensive, always labor-intensive process. Some might not even be able to keep their family land in the family. Working cooperatively gives the member farmers the ability to earn the highest possible prices for their produce. And because it's a non-profit, all the money the co-op makes goes back into the farms' operating costs. That means the growers can focus on ensuring their crops thrive and the cooperative makes sure the growers and their families thrive. Lancaster Farm Fresh may be small, but it is mighty.

88 ACRES

If you're among the roughly 6 percent of the population who suffer from food allergies, you know they're more than just a nuisance—they can be life threatening. Nicole Dalton came face-to-face with that scary truth when she was dating her now-husband, Rob. He has a nut allergy and when he was served a meal at a restaurant that contained nuts, it sent him into anaphylactic shock, and she had to rush him to the emergency room.

Rob recovered—and 88 Acres was born.

The company's seed bars are free of the eight most common food allergens among children and adults: peanuts, tree nuts, dairy, eggs, fish, shellfish, wheat, and soy. Their bakery also keeps its inner-city Boston facilities free of sesame, mustard, and sulfites, which are known allergy triggers as well. The staff—90 percent are local hires and 65 percent are women—are trained extensively in protocols to eliminate cross-contamination. They even use non-latex gloves to protect people with latex sensitivities.

88 Acres works with schools in a variety of ways, not only supplying safe snacks and breakfasts, but also educating kids about food gardening and seed nutrition. Children learn that they can (and should!) eat watermelon seeds, pumpkin seeds, flax seeds, sunflower seeds, and poppy seeds, all ingredients in 88 Acres' products.

But 88 Acres isn't just allergen-free and gluten-free, it's also waste-free—that's right, zero waste. Scraps from every batch of seed bars get recycled into crunchy "Seednola." Initially it was only shared among employees and friends, but Seednola became so popular that the bakery began to sell it online. It's safe to say the product "ex-seeded" expectations! (Sorry, we couldn't resist!)

FAMILY TREE FARMS

You know that moment when you sink your teeth into a fragrant, juicy, sweet, peak-season peach? It's flavor nirvana; and it spoils you for anything less. Which is why it's good for all of us that the Jackson family—proprietors of Family Tree Farms, known for stone fruits and berries—is on a mission to produce the best-tasting fruit in the world.

In addition to the original 5,000-acre family farm in California's San Joaquin Valley, Family Tree cultivates thousands of acres across the world—they have farms in Mexico, Peru, Rwanda, and South Africa. But the real quest for flavor happens in their cutting-edge research and development facility at the company's headquarters. This is where a thousand fruit varieties a year, sourced from nurseries and fruit-tree breeders across the planet, are grown in test plots. Researchers at the center conduct weekly tastings, scoring each variety on flavor, firmness, and appearance. And they're tough judges: Only one to three test varieties end up being commercially sold.

Those that do pass the test get the royal treatment—literally from the ground up. The company is committed to soil conservation, using no-till farming methods so the soil is disrupted as little as possible and retains the maximum amount of nutrients. Micro-drip irrigation and moisture-monitoring technology ensure the soil has the precise amount of water needed. And unlike many growers, Family Tree focuses on vertical integration: They not only grow the fruit, they also pick and pack it. It's a true seed-to-table (to tastebud!) operation.

D'ARRIGO CALIFORNIA

D'Arrigo California is the definition of multigenerational farming. Brothers Stefano and Andrea D'Arrigo established the company in the 1920s, planting the first 28 acres in San Jose, California. But while they were first-generation Americans, they were actually the second generation involved in the company's success: It was their father, back in Sicily, who told them what to grow, mailing them broccoli seeds from overseas at a time when broccoli was virtually unknown in America.

The "Andy Boy" logo and label came along with the family's third generation: Andrea's son, Andy, was born in 1924 and became the company's literal poster boy. Andy's son John now leads the company (that's the fourth generation, if you're counting), and there are fifth-generation family members working for D'Arrigo, as well.

It's no surprise that one of D'Arrigo's guiding principles is to acknowledge that the decisions they make today on their 35,000 acres will affect every generation that follows.

Take water conservation, a cornerstone of the company's multi-prong sustainability program. Protecting the water supply isn't just about making sure this year's broccoli, broccoli rabe, cauliflower, fennel, and romaine (among others) can grow. It's about making sure water will be available for the future—and safe for the communities that surround D'Arrigo's fields.

By tightly controlling its irrigation practices, the company reduces overall water use and protects the region's rivers, streams, and creeks. Too much water can carry soil—and with it, sediment, fertilizer, and pesticide residue (what's known as tail-water runoff)—into the natural waterways. Composting and using cover crops mean vegetables require less fertilizer in the first place, reducing the amount of chemicals that might seep into the groundwater.

This is just one example of the innovations they hope will leave the land healthy and fertile for future generations of D'Arrigo family farmers.

FROG HOLLOW FARM

Frog Hollow Farms, based in Brentwood, California, makes it a mission to support the health of every life form involved in its operations.

This starts with the people. Frog Hollow Farms is committed to everyone who helps them grow their certified-organic pluots, pears, apricots, apriums, persimmons, and more. Frog Hollow provides year-round employment and housing for many of the local residents. During the Covid pandemic, the farm set up vaccination clinics for employees and the community, and everyone on the staff is invited to monthly well-ness workshops.

The farm knows that healthy fruit needs to come from healthy soil: Their regenerative farming practices nurture the billions of microbes in soil that break down organic matter and provide essential nutrients to the fruit trees.

The use of micro-sprinklers, as opposed to overhead irrigation systems, allows them to apply just enough water to the trees, exactly where they need it—at the roots. The company says the sprinklers save 185 million gallons of water each year. That's more than what's contained in 377 Olympic-size swimming pools.

The list of sustainable practices goes on, including composting, repurposing damaged fruit, and donating to local food pantries. Frog Hollow is proud to be a good steward of people and the planet—it's their way of showing respect and thanks for all the elements that are critical to growing their spectacular fruit.

HAWTHORNE FOODS

Hawthorne Foods, based in New York's Hudson Valley, has built their business around three philosophical tentpoles: living foods, living soil, and living wages.

The company started with making and marketing sauerkraut and has since expanded to include kimchi, curtido (a Salvadorian sweet-spicy slaw), hot sauce, and gingered carrots and beets. All of them are wild fermented by microbes that are naturally occurring rather than deliberately introduced. Their foods are "living" since fermented foods contain probiotics—living microorganisms that contribute to a healthy gut.

The vegetables are grown by farmers whose focus is on living soil. The company purchases directly from organic family farms, many of which use regenerative farming practices such as crop rotation, planting cover crops, and supporting pollinator populations, all of which encourage beneficial microorganisms in the soil.

And then there's living wages. Hawthorne is determined to be a force for good in the community, committed to creating jobs that pay a better-than-average wage. They also reinvest 1 percent of their sales into the local farms that supply their vegetables. Earlier this year, the company became a B Corporation—a certification that confirms that the business prioritizes people and the planet, not just profit. It's their promise that every sour-salty, tangy bite of kimchi or sauerkraut doesn't just taste good, it also does good.

CAL-ORGANIC FARMS

No one would be surprised to hear that California was early to the organic game. Though national standards for organic produce weren't issued until 2002, it was a handful of Golden State farmers who created the first organic certification agency, California Certified Organic Farmers, in 1973.

The movement slowly gained momentum from there, and Danny Duncan is widely regarded as one of its pioneers. A family farmer in Lamont, California, he started with a quarter acre of lettuce in 1984. Three years later, he was devoting 200 acres to organics. Today, Cal-Organic Farms is one of the largest organic vegetable producers in the country, growing more than 65 types of vegetables—among them organic bok choy, carrots and baby carrots, greens, lettuces, and herbs—in the southern San Joaquin Valley.

The company's aim is to not just meet, but to surpass the standards for organic practices, starting with soil enrichment—they use naturally composted manure, plant cover crops, and crop rotation. The resulting soil is rich with nutrients, ideal for planting with certified-organic seeds that are then grown without synthetic fertilizers, herbicides, or pesticides. To avoid needing the latter, the company has fostered populations of beneficial ladybugs, hoverflies, and praying mantises to attack insects that attack plants. Cal-Organic even uses organic-only equipment during harvesting and packing.

Cal-Organic paved the way for many other organic growers, proving that farms should lead the way when it comes to setting new standards—and that a few strong voices can change the entire agricultural industry.

NORTH COUNTRY SMOKEHOUSE

In 1912, Abraham Satzow, a butcher in New Hampshire, sold meats he had smoked and cured himself to his neighbors out of a horse-drawn wooden cart. Fast-forward a century, and his descendant Mike Satzow is the head of what is now known as North Country Smokehouse, a 65,000-square-foot, state-of-the-art smokehouse facility in Claremont, New Hampshire.

North Country believes that progress should never come at the expense of tradition. The company's smokehouse sits on the same piece of land where Grandpa Abraham started his business. The meats are still hand selected. The cure recipes are still a family legacy. No dyes, artificial flavors, or fillers are ever used. All of North Country's products are handmade and slow smoked in small batches over local hardwoods by the company's expert butchers, wurstmachers (sausage makers), and smoke masters.

North Country Smokehouse uses humanely raised, sustainable pork from Canadian-based producer Les Viande du Breton (also a Baldor partner). That means the pigs are never relegated to gestational crates or fed growth hormones, antibiotics, or animal by-products. Respect for animals and tradition are core values that have stood the test of time for North Country Smokehouse.
