About Barilla

When Pietro Barilla established a modest pasta shop in Italy in 1877 he had a dream: to supply his neighborhood with the freshest, most delicious pasta to be shared at the family table. Today Barilla is the world leader in pasta production. They have the world's largest pasta factory in Parma, Italy and a large plant in Ames, Iowa. Barilla refrains from the use of genetically modified ingredients, guaranteeing not to use GMO ingredients in any of their products. Barilla has not changed the philosophy that has guided the family for four generations. It remains a family-run business dedicated to developing, creating and sharing delicious, wholesome product with the "neighborhood".
